1. XPath injection

Summary

	Severity:	High
-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------	-----------	-------------

Confidence:	Firm
Host:	https://caspianequity.in
Path:	/wp-content/plugins/popup-maker/assets/js/site.min.js

Issue detail

The URL path filename appears to be vulnerable to XPath injection attacks. The payload ' was submitted in the URL path filename, and an XPath error message was returned. You should review the contents of the error message, and the application's handling of other input, to confirm whether a vulnerability is present.

Issue background

XPath injection vulnerabilities arise when user-controllable data is incorporated into XPath queries in an unsafe manner. An attacker can supply crafted input to break out of the data context in which their input appears and interfere with the structure of the surrounding query.

Depending on the purpose for which the vulnerable query is being used, an attacker may be able to exploit an XPath injection flaw to read sensitive application data or interfere with application logic.

Issue remediation

User input should be strictly validated before being incorporated into XPath queries. In most cases, it will be appropriate to accept input containing only short alphanumeric strings. At the very least, input containing any XPath metacharacters such as " ' / @ = * [ ] ( and ) should be rejected.

Issue background

An HTML5 cross-origin resource sharing (CORS) policy controls whether and how content running on other domains can perform two-way interaction with the domain that publishes the policy. The policy is fine-grained and can apply access controls per-request based on the URL and other features of the request.

Trusting arbitrary origins effectively disables the same-origin policy, allowing two-way interaction by third-party web sites. Unless the response consists only of unprotected public content, this policy is likely to present a security risk.

If the site specifies the header `Access-Control-Allow-Credentials: true`, third-party sites may be able to carry out privileged actions and retrieve sensitive information. Even if it does not, attackers may be able to bypass any IP-based access controls by proxying through users' browsers.

Issue remediation

Rather than using a wildcard or programmatically verifying supplied origins, use a whitelist of trusted domains.

3. Client-side JSON injection (DOM-based)

Summary

	Severity:	Low
	Confidence:	Firm
	Host:	https://caspianequity.in
	Path:	/wp-content/plugins/popup-maker/assets/js/site.min.js

Issue detail

The application may be vulnerable to DOM-based client-side JSON injection. Data is read from document.cookie and passed to JSON.parse().

Because the data originates from a cookie, the application's behavior is not trivial to exploit in an attack against another user. Typically, you will need to find a means of setting an arbitrary cookie value in the victim's browser in order to exploit the vulnerability. Applications often contain "cookie-forcing" conditions which make this possible, and such a condition in any related domain or subdomain can potentially be used for this purpose. Nonetheless, this limitation somewhat mitigates the impact of the vulnerability.

Issue background

DOM-based vulnerabilities arise when a client-side script reads data from a controllable part of the DOM (for example, the URL) and processes this data in an unsafe way.

DOM-based JSON injection arises when a script incorporates controllable data into a string that is parsed as a JSON data structure and then processed by the application. An attacker may be able to use this behavior to construct a URL that, if visited by another application user, will cause arbitrary JSON data to be processed. Depending on the purpose for which this data is used, it may be possible to subvert the application's logic, or cause unintended actions on behalf of the user.

SiteWALL automatically identifies this issue using dynamic and static code analysis. Static analysis can lead to false positives that are not actually exploitable. If SiteWALL Scanner has not provided any evidence resulting from dynamic analysis, you should review the relevant code and execution paths to determine whether this vulnerability is indeed present, or whether mitigations are in place that would prevent exploitation.

Issue remediation

The most effective way to avoid DOM-based JSON injection vulnerabilities is not to parse as JSON any string containing data that originated from an untrusted source. If the desired functionality of the application means that this behavior is unavoidable, then defenses must be implemented within the client-side code to prevent malicious data from modifying the JSON structure in inappropriate ways. This may involve strict validation of specific items to ensure they do not contain any characters that may interfere with the structure of the JSON when it is parsed.

- `var r=document.cookie?document.cookie.split("; "):[],s=/(%[0-9A-Z]{2})+/g,a=0`
- `var p=r[a].split("=");`
- `' '===(l=p.slice(1).join("=")).charAt(0)&&(l=l.slice(1,-1));`
- `var u=p[0].replace(s,decodeURIComponent),l=f.read?f.read(l,u):f(l,u)||l.replace(s,decodeURIComponent);`
- `l=JSON.parse(l)`

4. Client-side HTTP parameter pollution (reflected)

There are 2 instances of this issue:

- <http://caspianequity.in/robots.txt> [URL path filename]
- <https://caspianequity.in/> [name of an arbitrarily supplied URL parameter]

Issue background

Client-side HTTP parameter pollution (HPP) vulnerabilities arise when an application embeds user input in URLs in an unsafe manner. An attacker can use this vulnerability to construct a URL that, if visited by another application user, will modify URLs within the response by inserting additional query string parameters and sometimes overriding existing ones. This may result in links and forms having unexpected side effects. For example, it may be possible to modify an invitation form using HPP so that the invitation is delivered to an unexpected recipient.

The security impact of this issue depends largely on the nature of the application functionality. Even if it has no direct impact on its own, an attacker may use it in conjunction with other vulnerabilities to escalate their overall severity.

Issue remediation

Ensure that user input is URL-encoded before it is embedded in a URL.

- /wp-json/wp/v2/users/1

Issue background

An HTML5 cross-origin resource sharing (CORS) policy controls whether and how content running on other domains can perform two-way interaction with the domain that publishes the policy. The policy is fine-grained and can apply access controls per-request based on the URL and other features of the request.

If another domain is allowed by the policy, then that domain can potentially attack users of the application. If a user is logged in to the application, and visits a domain allowed by the policy, then any malicious content running on that domain can potentially retrieve content from the application, and sometimes carry out actions within the security context of the logged in user.

Even if an allowed domain is not overtly malicious in itself, security vulnerabilities within that domain could potentially be leveraged by an attacker to exploit the trust relationship and attack the application that allows access. CORS policies on pages containing sensitive information should be reviewed to determine whether it is appropriate for the application to trust both the intentions and security posture of any domains granted access.

Issue remediation

Any inappropriate domains should be removed from the CORS policy.

6. Input returned in response (reflected)

There are 3 instances of this issue:

- [/author/supercaspianadmin2022/feed/ \[URL path folder 1\]](#)
- [/author/supercaspianadmin2022/feed/ \[URL path folder 2\]](#)
- [/author/supercaspianadmin2022/feed/ \[name of an arbitrarily supplied URL parameter\]](#)

Issue background

Reflection of input arises when data is copied from a request and echoed into the application's immediate response.

Input being returned in application responses is not a vulnerability in its own right. However, it is a prerequisite for many client-side vulnerabilities, including cross-site scripting, open redirection, content spoofing, and response header injection. Additionally, some server-side vulnerabilities such as SQL injection are often easier to identify and exploit when input is returned in responses. In applications where input retrieval is rare and the environment is resistant to automated testing (for example, due to a web application firewall), it might be worth subjecting instances of it to focused manual testing.

- CWE-116: Improper Encoding or Escaping of Output

7. Suspicious input transformation (reflected)

Summary

	Severity:	Information
	Confidence:	Firm
	Host:	https://caspianequity.in
	Path:	/author/supercaspianadmin2022/feed/

Issue detail

The application appears to URL-decode the name of an arbitrarily supplied URL parameter, and echo the result in the response.

The payload 4e2o1cjtjx%41j6nrr7cu5a was submitted in the name of an arbitrarily supplied URL parameter. This payload contains the %41 sequence, corresponding to the character 'A'. The input was copied into the application's response as 4e2o1cjtjxAj6nrr7cu5a indicating that the application URL-decoded the sequence.

It might be possible to use this behavior to bypass input validation by submitting superfluous URL-encodings of any filtered characters.

Issue background

Suspicious input transformation arises when an application receives user input, transforms it in some way, and then performs further processing on the result. The types of transformations that can lead to problems include decoding common formats, such as UTF-8 and URL-encoding, or processing of escape sequences, such as backslash escaping.

Performing these input transformations does not constitute a vulnerability in its own right, but might lead to problems in conjunction with other application behaviors. An attacker might be able to bypass input filters by suitably encoding their payloads, if the input is decoded after the input filters have been applied. Or an attacker might be able to interfere with other data that is concatenated onto their input, by finishing their input with the start of a multi-character encoding or escape sequence, the transformation of which will consume the start of the following data.

Issue remediation

Review the transformation that is being applied, to understand whether this is intended and desirable behavior given the nature of the application functionality, and whether it gives rise to any vulnerabilities in relation to bypassing of input filters or character consumption.

Vulnerability classifications

- CAPEC-153: Input Data Manipulation

8. Cross-domain Referrer leakage

There are 3 instances of this issue:

- /2017/09/gps-renewables-tackling-two-big-challenges-of-solid-waste/
- /2018/11/draft-national-education-policy-2019-and-its-ed-tech-entrepreneurs/
- /2020/01/an-economists-first-look-at-impact-investing/

Issue background

When a web browser makes a request for a resource, it typically adds an HTTP header, called the "Referer" header, indicating the URL of the resource from which the request originated. This occurs in numerous situations, for example when a web page loads an image or script, or when a user clicks on a link or submits a form.

If the resource being requested resides on a different domain, then the Referer header is still generally included in the cross-domain request. If the originating URL contains any sensitive information within its query string, such as a session token, then this information will be transmitted to the other domain. If the other domain is not fully trusted by the application, then this may lead to a security compromise.

You should review the contents of the information being transmitted to other domains, and also determine whether those domains are fully trusted by the originating application.

Today's browsers may withhold the Referer header in some situations (for example, when loading a non-HTTPS resource from a page that was loaded over HTTPS, or when a Refresh directive is issued), but this behavior should not be relied upon to protect the originating URL from disclosure.

Note also that if users can author content within the application then an attacker may be able to inject links referring to a domain they control in order to capture data from URLs used within the application.

Issue remediation

Applications should never transmit any sensitive information within the URL query string. In addition to being leaked in the Referer header, such information may be logged in various locations and may be visible on-screen to untrusted parties. If placing sensitive information in the URL is unavoidable, consider using the Referrer-Policy HTTP header to reduce the chance of it being disclosed to third parties.

9. Cross-domain script include

There are 3 instances of this issue:

- /
- /
- /

Issue background

When an application includes a script from an external domain, this script is executed by the browser within the security context of the invoking application. The script can therefore do anything that the application's own scripts can do, such as accessing application data and performing actions within the context of the current user.

If you include a script from an external domain, then you are trusting that domain with the data and functionality of your application, and you are trusting the domain's own security to prevent an attacker from modifying the script to perform malicious actions within your application.

Issue remediation

Scripts should ideally not be included from untrusted domains. Applications that rely on static third-party scripts should consider using Subresource Integrity to make browsers verify them, or copying the contents of these scripts onto their own domain and including them from there. If that is not possible (e.g. for licensing reasons) then consider reimplementing the script's functionality within application code.

Issue description

Publicly accessible backups and outdated copies of files can provide attackers with extra attack surface. Depending on the server configuration and file type, they may also expose source code, configuration details, and other information intended to remain secret.

Issue remediation

Review the file to identify whether it's intended to be publicly accessible, and remove it from the server's web root if it isn't. It may also be worth auditing the server contents to find other outdated files, and taking measures to prevent the problem from reoccurring.

Vulnerability classifications

- CAPEC-37: Retrieve Embedded Sensitive Data

11. Email addresses disclosed

There are 3 instances of this issue:

- /
- /principal-contact-details-others/
- /wp-json/wp/v2/pages/614

Issue background

The presence of email addresses within application responses does not necessarily constitute a security vulnerability. Email addresses may appear intentionally within contact information, and many applications (such as web mail) include arbitrary third-party email addresses within their core content.

However, email addresses of developers and other individuals (whether appearing on-screen or hidden within page source) may disclose information that is useful to an attacker; for example, they may represent usernames that can be used at the application's login, and they may be used in social engineering attacks against the organization's personnel. Unnecessary or excessive disclosure of email addresses may also lead to an increase in the volume of spam email received.

Issue remediation

Consider removing any email addresses that are unnecessary, or replacing personal addresses with anonymous mailbox addresses (such as helpdesk@example.com).

To reduce the quantity of spam sent to anonymous mailbox addresses, consider hiding the email address and instead providing a form that generates the email server-side, protected by a CAPTCHA if necessary.

12. Robots.txt file

Summary

	Severity:	Information
	Confidence:	Certain
	Host:	https://caspianequity.in
	Path:	/robots.txt

Issue detail

The web server contains a robots.txt file.

Issue background

The file robots.txt is used to give instructions to web robots, such as search engine crawlers, about locations within the web site that robots are allowed, or not allowed, to crawl and index.

The presence of the robots.txt does not in itself present any kind of security vulnerability. However, it is often used to identify restricted or private areas of a site's contents. The information in the file may therefore help an attacker to map out the site's contents, especially if some of the locations identified are not linked from elsewhere in the site. If the application relies on robots.txt to protect access to these areas, and does not enforce proper access control over them, then this presents a serious vulnerability.

Issue remediation

The robots.txt file is not itself a security threat, and its correct use can represent good practice for non-security reasons. You should not assume that all web robots will honor the file's instructions. Rather, assume that attackers will pay close attention to any locations identified in the file. Do not rely on robots.txt to provide any kind of protection over unauthorized access.

13. Cacheable HTTPS response

Summary

	Severity:	Information
	Confidence:	Certain
	Host:	https://caspianequity.in
	Path:	/

Issue detail

This issue was found in multiple locations under the reported path.

Issue background

Unless directed otherwise, browsers may store a local cached copy of content received from web servers. Some browsers, including Internet Explorer, cache content accessed via HTTPS. If sensitive information in application responses is stored in the local cache, then this may be retrieved by other users who have access to the same computer at a future time.

Issue remediation

Applications should return caching directives instructing browsers not to store local copies of any sensitive data. Often, this can be achieved by configuring the web server to prevent caching for relevant paths within the web root. Alternatively, most web development platforms allow you to control the server's caching directives from within individual scripts. Ideally, the web server should return the following HTTP headers in all responses containing sensitive content:

- Cache-control: no-store
- Pragma: no-cache

Issue detail

The server presented a valid, trusted TLS certificate. This issue is purely informational.

The server presented the following certificates:

Issue background

TLS (or SSL) helps to protect the confidentiality and integrity of information in transit between the browser and server, and to provide authentication of the server's identity. To serve this purpose, the server must present an TLS certificate that is valid for the server's hostname, is issued by a trusted authority and is valid for the current date. If any one of these requirements is not met, TLS connections to the server will not provide the full protection for which TLS is designed.

It should be noted that various attacks exist against TLS in general, and in the context of HTTPS web connections in particular. It may be possible for a determined and suitably-positioned attacker to compromise TLS connections without user detection even when a valid TLS certificate is used.
